

April 3, 2013

Roundup: Our Guide To Philadelphia's Lively Spring Festival Season

Posted by Jillian Wilson

Filed in: ATTRACTIONS

Like 445 Tweet 143 +1 2 Pin it 47

*With so many great festivals in the pipeline for April, May and June, we're providing you with a rundown so you can start making plans.
(Photos, clockwise from top left by G. Widman for GPTMC, M. Kennedy for GPTMC, Darryl W. Moran, E. Mencher for GPTMC)*

The birds are chirping, winter coats are nearly packed away and the sun is shining late into the day. Spring is here, Philadelphia, and we couldn't be more excited.

The spring season is full of daylong, weekend long and month long festivals that are sure to get you outside to enjoy the mild temperatures. Philadelphia's spring festivals range from an international children's festival to the oldest track meet in the country to an event meant for all the beer lovers out there.

Check out our chronological list of spring festivals all around the city below, and check back for updates as the season develops.

May

- Philadelphia International Children's Festival: The Annenberg Center for the Performing Arts plays host to a festival for the kids. The Philadelphia International Children's Festival, which is now in its 29th year, offers a week of family-friendly performances, crafts and interactive events. The event is set for April 30 to May 4.